

The Importance of Asking Questions

In a recent investigative report featured on WISHTV 8 News in Indianapolis, Indiana, John Pyle, Director of the Midwest Region, was interviewed regarding Pet Angel Memorial Center® and its best practices, as well as the rest of the industry and how pet families can protect themselves from what can be a misleading and painful experience.

In the report entitled “Pet cremation services lack regulation, business owners say,” television news reporter David Barras led an investigation into the pet cremation industry and discovered a very unregulated system. Barras learned that with the right equipment and zoning approval, anyone could open their own pet crematory, with few industry standards to oversee them.

During his interview with Pyle, Barras was informed about the best practices Pet Angel Memorial Center® employ—practices that go above and beyond the current industry standards. Pyle went on to discuss some of the key things pet families should keep in mind and ask about when selecting a pet cremation service, including how the crematory keeps track of the pets and if it has separate equipment for communal and individual cremations.

Pet Angel Memorial Center® is proud to have been recognized by Barras and the WISHTV 8 team as a provider that understands what best-in-class pet cremation services entail.
